

13 Avellanas

Surfers have the choice of a good beach break, an estuary break and the well-known reef break, "Little Hawaii". Located 10 km south of Tamarindo and now easily accessible by a graded dirt road. Some accommodations and restaurants are available.

accessible just off the main coastal route. Accommodations abound as Boca attracts hundreds of surfers from around the globe.

14 Negra Beach

One of the North Pacific's best right reef point breaks. Located 350 kms from San José and accessible all year round although a 4WD during the wet season is recommended. It is only 5 km south of Playa Avellanas but normally accessible by 4WD only. Several food and lodging accommodations are available in the area.

20 Caldera Port

This excellent left is located 3 km south of Boca Barranca and breaks off of a jetty/rivermouth near the port. Best on a big swell.

15 Nosara

A beach break with lefts and rights. The 350 km drive from San José across the Nicoya Peninsula takes about 5 hours. Food and lodging accommodations exist in the area.

21 Tivives Beach and Valor

Featuring a variety of waves from beach breaks (Tivives) to a rocky point (Valor). Good quality rights and lefts located 10 km south of Boca Barranca just off the paved coastal route before the exit to Jacó down the coast.

16 17 18 Coyote Beach, Mal País and Cabuya

Good beach breaks and reefs in a remote area on the Nicoya Peninsula where a 4WD is a must due to the rivers and heavy mud. Roads are more reliable and accommodations improve as one travels from Coyote south to Mal País.

22 Escondida Beach

A horseshoe reef break with

CENTRAL PACIFIC COAST

19 Boca Barranca

A river mouth with a very long left, located 100 kms from San José and easily

23 Jacó Beach

One of Costa Rica's most visited surf towns located approximately two hours from San José (140 km). It hosts a wide range of tourist attractions, surf shops, ding repair facilities, hotels, cabins, campgrounds and restaurants. Jacó Beach itself is a fun beach break, and home to some of Costa Rica's best surfers. It tends to close out on larger swells but its central location and wide range of amenities make it a good base for surf adventures.

24 Roca Loca

This "Crazy Rock" is located at the southern tip of Playa Jacó, just off the cliff from the coastal highway. This tricky wave breaks right over submerged, shallow rocks and is best during large swells.

25 Hermosa Beach

The most consistent beach break in the area (10 minutes south of Jacó) where deep waters off the coast and exposure to different swells have built up a variety of sand bars. The preferred sand bar to surf is located in front of a large tree known as the "almendro". Explore up and down the beach for a perfect A-frame peak of your own. Accommodations are available nearby.

26 27 28 29 West Esterillos, East Esterillos, Bejuco, Boca Damas

An area with good potential for those willing to go a little out of their way for surf. Plenty of beach breaks with conditions similar to those of Playa Hermosa. Access is easy and some accommodations exist.

South Pacific Coast

30 Quepos

A small left located at the mouth of the estuary just outside of town, and several good beach breaks in the area. Quepos is about 45 minutes south of Jacó. With Manuel Antonio National Park and white beaches just over the hill, tourist accommodations and restaurants are abundant.

31 Espadilla Beach

Located at the end of the road into Manuel Antonio and just before the entrance to the National Park, this beach break can be loads of fun when large swells make it into the bay. Most surfers prefer the hefty right at the northern end of the beach. Abundant accommodations, restaurants, bars, entertainment, surf shops and ding repairs are easily accessible.

32 El Rey Beach

Beach break sporting many peaks. After driving 25 minutes south of Quepos on the unpaved road to Playa Dominical, turn right at Roncador. Accommodations and restaurants are recommended in Quepos or Manuel Antonio.

33 Dominical Beach

Another powerful and consistent beach break much like Playa Hermosa with a more exuberant, tropical landscape. Other semi-secret reef breaks and river mouths lie in the area. Accessible by dirt road traveling south of Quepos or a 4-5 hour drive on the Pan-American Highway over the mountains from San José. Several pleasant accommodations and restaurants are available.

34 Drake Bay

Accessible only by boat and quickest from the town of Sierpe, this remote area offers several areas of long, powerful waves during a big swell. The right at Rio Claro is about a 30-45 minute walk along the coast and through the jungle from Drake Bay. True adventurers can explore the coastline of the pristine and distant Corcovado National Park, approximately 1 1/2 hours by boat. Several hotels, cabins, campgrounds and restaurants exist at Drake Bay, but camping is required in other areas.

35 Matapalo

This excellent right point is located across the Golfo Dulce from Pavones and can often be seen breaking from there during large swells. Surfers can drive there via the Pan-American Highway. 4WD is recommended. It is also possible to rent a boat out of Pavones or Golfito. Local airlines can fly you down to Puerto Jiménez where you can catch a taxi to the point. Several remotely located accommodations exist, but camping is a must if you want to wake and see the break from your bed.

36 Pavones

Considered one of the longest lefts in the world, this point is located 400 kms south of San José (8 hours by car). For those unwilling to drive, local airlines can fly you to Golfito, where you may catch a bus or taxi to Pavones. Good accommodations exist on the point and surrounding area but camping is a possibility if you are not afraid of heavy rains during peak swell months.

37 Punta Burica

Very remote and little explored reef breaks south of Pavones and accessible only by boat. Nearest accommodations are in Pavones.

WINDSURFING IN COSTA RICA

Much like surfing, windsurfing trips in Costa Rica can be adventuresome and unforgettable if you know where and when to go to have the most fun. Our wind conditions, irregular topography, small size and vibrant biodiversity create a dream-come-true for any adventuresome windsurfer willing to explore new territories. The vast majority of the windsurfing practiced in this tropical paradise is on lakes, but the off-shore winds in the North Pacific during the summer months (December - April) create an excellent funnel effect for certain areas. In the extreme northwest, nearing the border of Nicaragua, the beautiful beaches of CuaJiniquil and Puerto Soley in Bahía Salinas host tranquil waters but experience the direct off-shore winds of the summer months. Accommodations and restaurants are available in the area. Here, Playa Naranjo also experiences the strong summer off-shore winds, but attracts heavy swells for windsurfers in search of waves. Camping is a must. Further down the coastline, about an hour drive from Liberia, Flamingo Beach and Playa Potrero offer calm waters and excellent wind conditions. Many hotels, resorts, cabins, restaurants and discotheques are located in this area. Tamarindo Bay, about 45 minutes south can also be a popular place to practice windsurfing in average waves. Because ocean windsurfing is not very common in Costa Rica few areas in the Central and Southern Pacific regions are recognized. We recommend trying out the Golfo Dulce due to its calm waters and strategic location for winds from all directions. Inland, the most highly recognized windsurfing spot in Costa Rica is the Arenal Reservoir. At the southeastern rim of the lake towers the Arenal Volcano blowing off steam and lava as windsurfers skim across the lake with 55-70 knot winds. Conditions are best during the summer months as windsurfers will encounter with most spots. Windsurfing equipment can be rented at a few local shops and hotels around the lake. Accommodations include various hotels, cabins and restaurants scattered throughout the area and especially in the towns of Fortuna, Nuevo Arenal and Tilarán. Other points of interest to explore include the nearby hot water springs, waterfalls, and rainforest trails. Coto Lake, just north of Arenal, is another superb spot for windsurfing during these summer months of ceaseless winds. Traveling about an hour east of San José through Cartago, the old capital of Costa Rica, windsurfers can catch a ride on the Cachi Reservoir. This dammed up section of the Reventazón River offers a spectacular view of the picturesque Orosi Valley and surrounding coffee plantations. With such easy access, hours of windsurfing can be practiced in the cool freshwaters of Cachi in just a day. Strong winds are not always guaranteed but its location makes it a popular spot for weekend windsurfing trips. With all these locations to choose from, variable conditions to work with, and spectacular scenery to witness, a windsurfing vacation in Costa Rica could be the best and most memorable adventure getaway ever.
